ABOUT BPW

BPW is a global NGO that develops women's potential at all levels through advocacy, mentoring, networking, skill building, education, and economic empowerment programs & projects around the world. We take action to achieve women's equality in social, economic, community and political terms.

BPW holds Special Category Status at the United Nations and represents the voice of women in more than 100 countries. Established in Australia in 1925, BPW Australia has been influencing and driving legislative changes such as Paid Parental Leave Equal Pay and divorce law to help shape the way Australian women live their lives today.

IS POLICING STILL A "NON-TRADITIONAL" ROLE FOR WOMEN?

Simone Van Der Sluys
Strategic Coordinator,
Executive Committee for Women and Acting Senior Sergeant, WA Police

If you think that WA Police is one of the last bastions of male-dominated employment, then you've got another think coming!

Simone Van Der Sluys is a senior female police officer with 16 years of experience, including ten years as a detective in the area of child abuse. Awarded WA Police Officer of the Year in 2001, Simone has recently taken on a strategic role at the Joondalup Police Academy, focusing on fostering women in leadership.

Simone will join us to share an account of her career, and to discuss what WA Police are doing to improve gender equality and to actively encourage women into leadership roles in the service.

Join us as we discuss the impact this transition to a more gender-balanced workforce has had on the culture of the police service, its employees and its relationship with the general public.

Does society still hold on to views of 'traditional' work roles for women? Do young women who are challenging the stereotypes have mentors and role models? What barriers still exist? Come along for an evening of lively debate. We look forward to seeing you there!
